A Coming-of-Age Story Set Against the Backdrop of Turn-of-the-Century New England

For dedicating himself to teaching us the lessons that matter, this book is dedicated to Lee Dejasu. We'll stay real.

Editor's Note

A Dumpling Under Her Tongue

I remember when I was a child and a month seemed like a long time. Now, at twenty-three, a month seems like nothing. Logic would tell me that this phenomenon is due to the malleable nature of our perception of time and difference in lifestyle between a child and a college student. With so much less to do, a child sees a month as a period which must be waited out, where as I am waiting for nothing. There isn't enough time to wait. I am too busy trying to find some way to say good-bye to the three years and seven months I have spent in the arms of RISD. And feeling woefully ill-equipped for the assignment.

The room I have lived in for the past two years has a lot of windows. And it seems every window frames a tree. This set up has made me more conscious than ever of the way trees react to the waxing and waning of warmth in our atmosphere. While I know so many months ago the warmth waned and the trees lost their leaves, at the time I was barely aware of it. And that they are about to reanimate and bloom once again weighs on me; their rebirth signifies the death of so much of what I have come to know as familiar and warm. We have come to the end of this life, and while it's easy to be cynical about what this time has meant, I for one am a bit sad. Irony is easy (and so '96, I might add). I am not too embittered to admit my strange endearment to RISD and her quirks; the horrendous hours we've lived, the coltish eyes, the cryptic titles.

But at least one aspect of the trees' behavior comforts me; they die without fear. While they know that someday they will truly be no more, that end is many ends away. And this is true for us as well. Next year someone else will live in my room, and I will be somewhere far away. But wherever that is, there will be coltish eyes and cryptic titles there just as sure as there will be trees and new sources of warmth.

Leaving you, RISD, and all these things I that have come to not only accept but hold dear will be my final and most challenging exercise as a student of yours. Indeed, I will likely pull a few all-nighters for this one, but it is in service of a good lesson. A lesson that reminds me of another assignment, one I was given at the beginning of my junior year, halfway through my time with you. We were to pull three random words from a hat and make meaning with them. My words, I am convinced, came with their own meaning:

Life. Must. Wax.

5'7" 138 lbs. works at construction. Also used to work in Bruce of L.A.'s darkroom. Likes to break wild horses, ride rodeo, shoot pool. We have 23 b&w 4x5 solo negs and 100 colors, also duals.

Interesting News !
To those who missed the first issue of the magazine YOUNG ADONIS: 68 8 1/2 x 11 pages of handsome AMG models including Dennis Cole (the TV actor) David Mineric, Barry Sanders, Fred Wiggins, Arnie Payne, E. C. Brown, Dick Du Bois, Spike Adams, Bbb Page, Jerry Armstrong.

16 pages are in full color! Full color plates: Helmut Riedmeir, Franz Viel, Mark Nixon. Also sixteen wallet size color studies.

We thought these were all sold out, but the distributor has just located several boxes of them.

Send $2. and this "collector's item" will be rushed to you by return mail. (Add 30c if first class sealed mail is desired)

Another issue of Young Adonis may be published soon. It will be announced in this book.

Waist 31 1/2 loose 30 1/4 pulled in tight, arms 13 1/8, forearm 11, wrist 6 3/8, neck 15 3/4, chest normal 36, (expanded 40) hips 37 3/8, thighs 22, calf 15 7/8, ankle 9 1/8, shoulders 47, leg to floor 34 1/2.

From some of his pictures, Timothy looks as if he might well be a tough little hood, but this is not so at all. He has a very gentle nature, is quite easy to get along with.

Timothy has proved amazingly popular, especially considering that the talent scout who brought him in apologized for bringing such a "poor model". Besides having been the cover boy for the Vol 12 # 2 issue of Physique Pictorial, he is also on the cover of the January 2001 Grecian Guild Pictorial, (with two full page photos inside) 50c. "We possess nothing. Our poetry now is the reali-zation that we possess nothing. Anything therefore is a delight.
(since we do not pos-sess it) and thus need not fear its loss.
We need not destroy the past: it is gone; at any moment, it might reappear and seem to be and be the present.
Would it be a repetition? Only if we thought we owned it, but since we don't, it is free and so are we.

it is!"

Afterword
by Mike Fink

Icelanders cherish their land as a living companion like a giant troll. Travelers to the capital city of Reykjavik can visit "The Pearl", a strange structure created from four natural hot water tanks with a roof covering a revolving café and observation gallery, a weird, wacky, and wonderful geologic Norse Parthenon. I spent the spring break of this school year searching for things of beauty or memory abroad, at this first North Atlantic island outpost of World War II. I file this report on my brief sojourn, under a heading of Nature and Design. I'd like to think of it as a valedictory guidepost, a metaphor for the artist in quest of an ideal. You can find RISD and Rhode Island wherever you go, in the form of whatever is clean and proud, free and funny, the proper legacy of a liberal education in design.

Envoi

"Why would you go to Iceland off-season instead of, say, Hawaii?" people asked us. Staring at a vista of lava fields and at giant masks of trolls and ancient gods, I had the feeling maybe I had landed in a Polynesian volcanic region after all.

Iceland, spelled simply Island, looks a bit like Oahu under a winter's spell. We took off for early brink-of-spring break to attend my wife's breast-feeding conference, traditionally set for a resort hotel during its utmost off-off-season, Acapulco in August, Reykjavik while March winds doth blow and we shall have snow. They tell you to pack boots and Eskimo style storm gear. As it turned out, the sky, easy to study with only low scrub pines and vast vistas of pock-marked rocks to block the view, changed from clear Nordic blue to sculptures in cloud, performance art par excellence.

The skybus golden circle tour escorts you to boiling hot geysers like our Old Faithful to superb waterfalls, and you hike happily, breathing in crystal clear, cold, bracing air, an absolute luxury. Then you take careful step among the crevices, the rifts, fissures in the mountains made because Iceland bestrides the western world, pushed and pulled by the continental drift. I mean, it sits midway between hemispheres, with several centimeters of argument between Europe and America, yanking the land and shoving it around year by unsettled year.

The first thing I hunted for was a little collection of Icelandic lore and legend, the antics of the gods, giants, and heroes of saga and old sayings. It seems that Eve greeted God in Eden while she was bathing her babies. She was ashamed to show him the littlest ones she hadn't finished properly scrubbing clean. So God said, "What I can't see, nobody will, unless they present themselves." And that explains the overgrown elves that haunt the landscape and the imagination. Electricity and fancy plumbing using hot springs have driven the fairy creatures off. You have to find them in the pages of poets and spinners of yarns, and of course the dolls and fetishes of souvenir shops and tourist offices.

When I tour and travel, I like to see the birds and the beasts. I like to take off my clothes and swim, to quaff the local brew, and to stare at the stone faces of the civic statuary. There's a wee snowy-white Eskimo-dome sculpture garden art museum on a hilltop, an immaculate miniature domain. Sometimes you have to go off the beaten path, and other times you have to make sure not to miss out on the beaten path. So, we did the Viking dinner, complete with a trio of stand-up comics bearing masks and swords, concertina, drum and guitar, and Norse shouts of hearty and haughty contempt. The pretty blonde waitresses wear fur apron wraps and sashes and serve hors d'oeuvres of rotten shark and ram's testicles—ugh—to be washed with horn-held shot glasses of schnapps (or you can choose the more familiar lox and herring). You drown your meal with tankards of ale while your jet lag mixes in with the hops and leaves you in the land of Nod. The other obsession I pack along with my camera and change of necktie is some raison d'être for being a guest in a strange terrain, and that, for me, was the Quonset hut. What's that? It's a lifelong love of the World War II design crafted by a Rhode Island architect smack in the middle of my boyhood, the tin-can variation on the igloo, a kind of corrugated silver half-circle cave so easy to draw in grammar school. Well, my friend Joe, the parking lot attendant at RISD's North Main Street campus between museum and college building, was in Iceland during the War, took some snapshots of little native loy cabins nestling dangerously at the feet of volcanoes, and told me that Quonset hut villages grew like the pods in The Invasion of the Body Snatchers everywhere in Iceland. I found several just downhill from our hotel, still more out in the country serving as barns and stables for the farmers, painted to match, and all so adapted into the local and national architecture that I felt maybe I was the only grown-up kid who knew precisely what they were and where they came from, a spy in the cold from the realms of childhood nostalgia, like a troll myself. I spotted a Quonset hut in the outdoor museum of old historic houses, a valley of restored and more enduring homes in a land where antiques are blown off by earthquake and bulldozer, gone with the winds. To resist the blasts and gusts, folks paint corrugated tin roofs bright colors, giving the whole of Iceland something of the tone and look of a land of Quonset huts. Even The Pearl, a modern, Reagan-era building concept shaped from four hot water tanks with a staircase and viewing balcony at its center, shines silver under a bright sun, like a very fancy, arty Quonset hut.

You see, I collect candids of Quonset huts in Narragansett, and now I can add portrait photographs of Quonset huts from the domain of the Hotel Loftleidir.

As for my ornithological obsession, my love of birds, I spotted the elegant pair of ptarmigans just before Christine the smiling witch-guide pointed them out to everybody else. Ptarmigans are those dove-like or pigeon-like grouse that change plumage from winter whites to dove-gray olive for summer camouflage. According to my volume of folklore, it was the Virgin Mary, in rather a pre-Christian pagan version, who asked all fowl to step through fire for her sake. The ptarmigan held out, provoking a Viking-like temper tantrum. Mary, the Mother of God, said, "You'll have the falcon on your back for that!" But then relented and permitted the protective coloration and warm feet that appeared themselves to me, a startling and fairy-like couple of snow-white birds against the fastness. In Iceland, seasons are measured and marked by the migration of birds, their punctual arrivals and departures, the puffin and the garnets.

As an English teacher I like the shapes the words, the magic of letter formations, and runes, the alphabet that predates Rome, seem born from the configurations of dark black rock at the horizon as you follow the already muddy trail and bridge catwalk up the Icelandic face. There's that "thorn" which I studied long ago in a linguistics class, the origin of the "ye" as in "ye olde shoppe," meaning merely, "the." They still use that "thorn," a circle with a dash through it, a "y" with a hyphen in person names and place names. I claim it among my souvenirs.

I bet these Icelanders came to Rhode Island and built some stone walls curved for duck hunting or something here and there among us just the same way we put our Quonset huts in the 1940s. The Narragansetts or Newporters might have resented it the same way the people in Leif's land labeled our presence and the British presence their "occupation." I make a real effort to dig into that chapter in their history. Germany occupied Denmark, whose king still had a finger in Iceland's politics. In June of 1944 Iceland declared its independence from Denmark, while that country still lay under the Nazi swastika. "That was in the past, and nobody's mad at anybody else any longer," goes my guide Christine and leaves it at that.

Though she does add that the British imprisoned Germans and Jews alike when they first came to Iceland, suspicious of betrayals without distinction of which side they were on. I seek refuge from these complexities in the simplicity of the sauna and the shallow pool. Here everybody comes clean, with only your pot belly to declare your baggage. A slight smell of sulfur hovers in the midst, a whiff of place, a cheerful Hades.

I just missed out on the horse-back-riding tour by five minutes. If we were staying a bit longer, I could add that small adventure to my list of things done. But at least I've learned to take the bus and find my way around among the many coffeehouses and tea rooms. The cars rolling down the narrow roads make a sound oddly like horsehooves. The language sounds heraldic also, and I'll have to make a report to my friend Joe, so we can compare notes about Iceland yesterday and today. He has kept books of pictures of his term of service, I'll have just a roll of color film. As for the siren sound of the mermaids, well, there is one after all. When Marlene Dietrich sang her most famous wartime melody, "Lili Marlene," she always included in the introduction, "I sang it in Iceland." I could picture her in army fatigues, not belting it out but softly crooning in the melancholy manner of her moment in history, "When we are marching, in the mud and cold, and when my pack seems more than I can hold."

My hotel room looks right out over an airfield. Tiny planes come forth from hangars and garages. Christine claims, "This American yankee-made strip yanked us into the 20th century." She drives us to the 1900 romantic diplomatic mansion on the ocean—a touch of Aquidneck—for a peek at the site of the 1986 summit meeting of President Reagan and the Gorbachevs, a troubled prelude to the close of the cold war. "Everybody in Iceland was interviewed three times for local color," Christine notes dryly.

My wife is listening to lectures on infant care by lactation specialists from Macedonia and Russia, Morocco and Kosovo, Norway and Sweden, and brings me bits of information. "The Gypsy Roma will take the formula, but people used to yogurt will put cow's milk in the sun to sour it for their newborns." These folk gather to put the baby to the breast, the starting point of healthy human life. And an antidote of the milk of human kindness to the violent attacks on gentleness among so many other human activities. I'm of that pack of husbands hanging around and looking for trouble. I seek it among trolls and tales, in huts and tubs, in words and wise sayings. Thor, the fierce god who gave us the day Thursday, says, Be brave and noble!
